Welcome back to school!

For those of you interested in the United Nations and Sustainable Development, please consider registering for ES-310 / ES-410. This globally taught course is designed to connect you directly with thought leaders in the key areas of Sustainability - Economy, Politics, Environment and Society.

ES-310 // ES-410: Tuesdays, 8-10:40 AM   4 Credits   2 Seats Open

The broad goal of this course is to introduce students to the foundations of key sectoral and thematic knowledge for important challenges to sustainable development: food and nutritional security, social service delivery, energy policy, water resource management, urbanization, infrastructure, human rights, biodiversity, adaptation to climate change, mitigating Greenhouse Gases, sustainable business, good governance, and more.

Through the Global Classroom, an approach pioneered by Columbia University and the Global Masters of Development Practice Association, we will learn together, virtually, with students from universities around the world. The first 90-minutes of each class will be virtual, followed by in-person instruction for the remaining class time.
